This program was administered by WSU and involved two subcontracts with the state energy offices of Idaho and Montana. Activities included technical assistance, education activities, and coordination among the states. The Industrial Technologies Program (ITP) worked with 19 partners in the state on cost-shared research and development projects and on near-term industrial savings through the Save Energy Now initiative. ITP supported one university-based Industrial Assessment Center that provided free energy assessments to industry while simultaneously training the engineers of tomorrow. The program is complete.
